Abstract: Remember that consistent practice and exposure to language sounds and pronunciation patterns are key to developing strong phonetic skills. Incorporate regular listening exercises, speaking practice, and self-assessment into your learning routine to make steady progress in improving your pronunciation.

To organize the methodology of working on phonetics material and listening pronunciation skills, you can implement the following methods:

1. Learn Phonetics: Phonetics deals with the study of phonemes and their pronunciation. To work on phonetics, you need to understand the system of phonemes and determine their pronunciation. You can use phonics books, online resources or phonics courses for this.

2. Voice Control: To learn how to control voice sounds, others can learn how to create and pronounce voice sounds using annotated dictionaries, online resources, and videos. This will help you understand the rules of how to form and distribute vocal sounds.

3. Listening practices: To learn listening practices, it is necessary to listen to audios and work on texts related to the familiarity of sounds. Texts help you learn to pronounce sentences and words correctly. By listening to audios and reading texts, you can recognize phonemes and pronounce them correctly.

4. Improve pronunciation: To improve pronunciation, first start listening to yourself. It is very important to read texts and listen to audios to hear your own pronunciation and identify its mistakes. It also helps to repeat the texts used from the audio for pronunciation and check against your own pronunciation.

5. Needs Guides: There are guides to help you work on phonics. Using these guides, you can learn how to make phonemes, understand pronunciation rules, and check your own pronunciation. These guides can be found in phonics books, online resources, or mobile apps.

6. Mastery: To master pronunciation, you need to familiarize yourself with the voice and after learning the pitch levels, continue to listen to your own voice and identify its mistakes. Such practices automatically increase the correct pronunciation.

This method is a method of working on the phonetics material and you can use the following methods to organize the skill of pronunciation by listening:
